RE: Wolf Response to Laser Treatment

Dear Mr. McMillen:

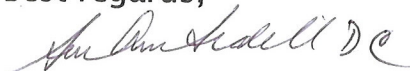

Per our discussion at the American Veterinary Chiropractic Association's conference in Houston earlier this month about exchanging pictures for your frequency "cookbook", enclosed please find the "before and after" pictures of Gano the wolf.

As you can see, the top picture demonstrates his profound atrophy in the hind leg muscles during his first treatment with the Erchonia Laser. The second photo (sorry for the quality—somehow the print became torn) is six months later, after only 4 treatments with the laser. Since Gano was an "untouchable", he was not given chiropractic adjustments and so low-level laser was the only treatment he received.

The Erchonia Low-Level Laser gave Gano back his quality of life. Instead of struggling to rise from recumbency and staggering to walk, he rose easily and floated in his gait. It was a dramatic response. One of the many wonderful things about treating animals is that there is no expectation or placebo effect and therefore is a pure cause-and-effect relationship between treatment and response.

Thank you to Erchonia for making it possible for us to make a difference in this animal's life!

Best regards,

Sue Ann Sidell, DC, CAC
